FOREWORD

Welcome to Flightglobal Insight's Aircraft Finance Special Report 2013 brought to you in association with CFM International and prepared using information from the extensive Flight Premium portfolio. The report provides an analytical overview of the year 2012 looking at order and transaction activities, the finance and leasing markets, as well as opinions from the appraiser community regarding the year ahead.

The year 2012 ended with an Airbus and Boeing order backlog of 9,055 aircraft, up 847 units on the previous year. This is a new record for the year-end commercial aircraft backlog. The previous record was 2010 with 8,502 units.

Net orders for Airbus and Boeing totalled 2,036 aircraft in 2012, compared with 2,224 in 2011.

Although Airbus's output rose by 10% in 2012 to a record 588 deliveries, its US rival surpassed the European airframer's tally by 13 aircraft. Boeing's total of 601 deliveries represents the manufacturer's second-highest airliner output ever, and is just 14 units shy of its record 620 shipments in 1999.

The European manufacturer handed over 455 aircraft single-aisle aircraft last year, representing 88% of total deliveries. In comparison, the 737 represented 69% of Boeing's deliveries in 2012.

Year-on-year backlog at Airbus increased by 245 aircraft to 4,682 units, while Boeing recorded 4,373 units at year-end, 602 more than in 2011 as the US manufacturer sold 914 Max aircraft.

Although Boeing traditionally has been more conservative with single-aisle production rates, it is catching up with Airbus now.

During the past two years, 737 production has risen by more than 20% to 38 aircraft. Rates will increase again to 42 a month in the first-half of 2014 and, at that time, 737 production rates will match those of the A320 family.

On the longhaul side, the A330/A340 production rate was 9.6 aircraft a month last year, up from 7.25 in 2011. Airbus handed over 30 A380s in 2012, up from 26 in 2011.

Boeing delivered 26 767s last year compared with 20 in 2011.

The 787 model production rate was 3.8 aircraft a month on average, with the 777 production line almost reached seven aircraft a month, up from 6.1 aircraft in 2011.

With the full implementation of the new Aircraft Sector Understanding (ASU) this year, the cost of aircraft financing will become more expensive. The new ASU raises the export credit premium for all borrowers, but the rise is steeper for those with a better credit rating. Higher-risk airlines will still pay more than they do now but not as much proportionally, making export credit less attractive to stronger airlines.

Higher pricing under the new ASU will push airlines towards commercial debt financing and operating leases, says Kostya Zolotusky, Boeing Capital's managing director capital markets, leasing. He believes aircraft leasing will continue to be a "very strong market", growing at a faster rate than seen in the past decade. "Airlines will rent rather than buy aircraft and so we see the number of aircraft in the global fleet that are on operating leases going towards 50% this decade."

Leasing companies increased their market share to 40% of new deliveries at Airbus in 2012. The European manufacturer handed over 122 new aircraft directly to operating lessors last year out of a total of 588 aircraft, representing a 21% market share. Another 114 units were acquired by lessors under purchase and leaseback agreements during the year. Operating lessors are expected to represent 23% of Airbus direct deliveries this year.

Increased appetite from the capital markets for commercial aircraft will likely see more US Export-Import Bank (Ex-Im) guaranteed bonds and pre-funded bond transactions.

According to data compiled by Boeing Capital and Flightglobal, Ex-Im bond issuances totalled $5.6 billion in 2012. This compares with $587 million worth of transactions in 2011 and $2.48 billion in 2010.

The final quarter of 2012 was particularly active with 12 transactions worth $2.3 billion.

Last year, Latam Airlines Group emerged as the largest Ex-Im bond issuer with an estimated $1.8 billion in financing.

This report ludes a breakdown of aircraft finance transactions which took place in 2012. This information has been extracted from the Flightglobal reports and Ascend's database. It has been displayed in various ways, enabling you to browse through the deals by operator, aircraft model, month, value and participant.

Finally, the report offers opinions from appraisers at Ascend, Collateral Verifications, IBA Group, ICF SH&E and Tailwind Capital, who reflect on 2012 and provide insight into what we might expect this year.

We hope that you find this information useful and that the Aircraft Finance Special Report 2013 will be a helpful reference source of closing all your aircraft transactions this year.

FINANCE INTERACTIVE

Airline Business and aviation finance specialist DVB Bank have teamed up for the third annual interactive special to scrutinise this market.

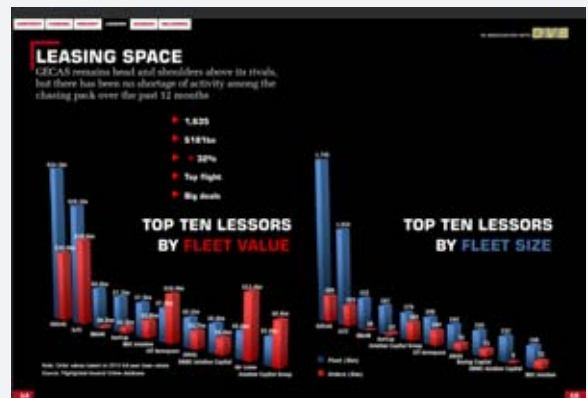

Published in parallel with the annual financing and leasing survey found in the Airline Business February issue, the special report tackles the key issues facing the sector through an interactive format.

Topics explored this year include how the leasing sector is reasing its proportion of the world fleet, and the issue of airliner economic lives. The airlines' 2013 financing requirements and the likely changes in funding sources are also examined.

Leading experts and analysts in the sector were asked for their views on these major issues. These include Nigel Taylor of EADS and Boeing's Kostya Zolotusky; Bertrand Grabowski and Bert van Leeuwen of DVB Bank and analysts Rob Morris and Paul Sheridan from Flightglobal's consultancy arm Ascend.

The online special also incorporates a range of data presented in interactive format, giving snapshots of the largest lessors, funding sources and financing forecasts by region.

FLEET WATCH: 2012

Commercial aviation continues to grow

The year 2012 was another strong year for commercial aviation as a record number of aircraft were delivered and order backlog reached an all-time high at the end of the year.

Net orders in 2012

The 2,582 net orders for 2012 represent a decrease of 11% on the previous year. Apart from the regional jet market, each market group received fewer orders.

Boeing emerged as the leader in the 2012 commercial order battle with 1,191 net orders, their strongest year since the all-time high of 2007. Airbus totalled 833 net orders, a decrease of 43% on the previous year. Bombardier received 35 orders for the CSeries and 120 for their range of regional aircraft, while Comac took in 115 orders for the C919. Mitsubishi Regional Jet recorded an order of 100 MRJ90s, which are scheduled to be delivered from 2017. Embraer and Irkut received 56 and 35 net orders respectively in 2012.

Narrowbody net orders decreased by 11% on the previous year with a total of 2,034 in 2012. Boeing lead with 1,112 narrowbody orders, including 914 for the re-engined 737 Max. Airbus received 739 orders of which 478 were for the A320neo. Widebody net orders came in at 173, a decrease of 48% on the previous year. Airbus took in 94 widebody orders while Boeing received 79. Regional jets benefited with a year-on-year increase of more than 100% in 2012.

Indonesia's Lion Air was responsible for the largest number of orders during the year as the operator ordered a total of 235 aircraft including 201 737 Max aircraft, 29 737 Next Generation (NG) aircraft and five 787s. Budget carrier Norwegian ordered the A320neo and 737 Max aircraft with 100 of each, as well as 22 737s. United Airlines ordered 100 737 Max and 50 737 aircraft while AirAsia ordered 100 A320s including 64 Neo aircraft. The 100 MRJ90 order came from US operator SkyWest Airlines in a deal valued at $8.4 billion at list price.

Lessor Air Lease ordered a total of 119 aircraft (75 737 Max, 36 A320neo, four ATR 72s, three A330s and a single Embraer 175) while GECAS ordered 91 aircraft (75 737 Max, 14 737s and two E-195s).

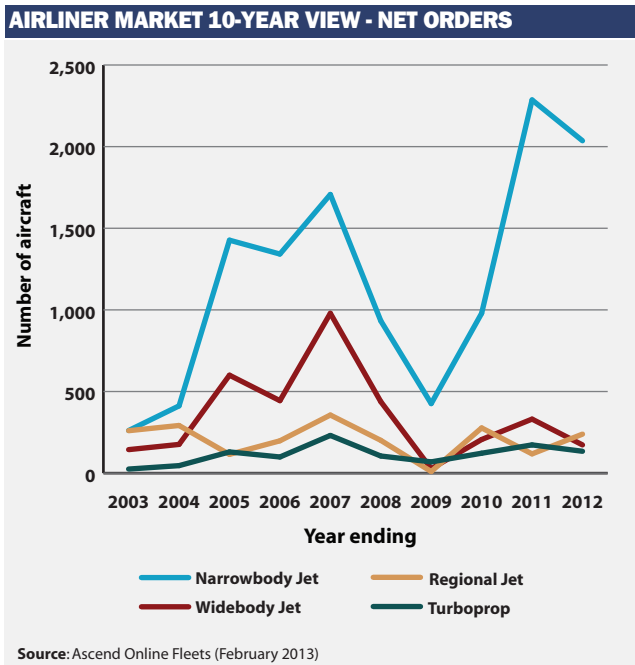

Other large orders came in during the year from Pegasus Airlines with 75 A320neo and BOC Aviation with 53 A320s (including 25 Neo) and 20 C919s.

Commercial aircraft deliveries in 2012

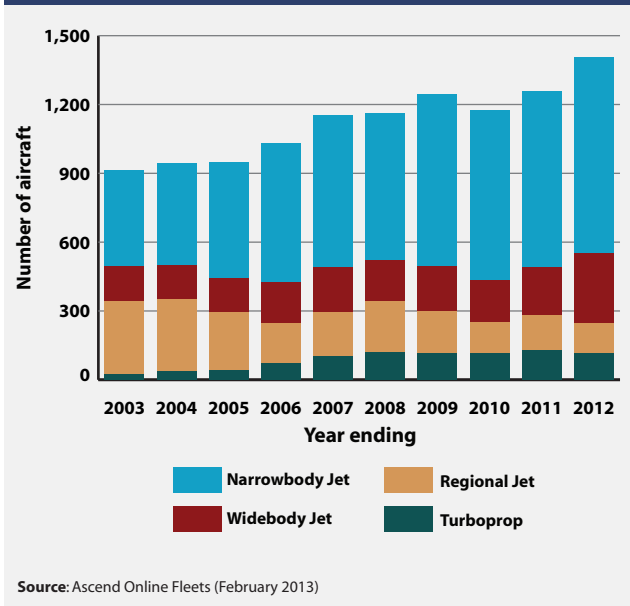

A total of 1,402 commercial aircraft deliveries took place in 2012 including 850 narrowbody and 305 widebody aircraft, an all-time high for both market groups. Regional jet and turboprop deliveries totalled 128 and 117, respectively.

It was an aircraft delivery record year for both Airbus and Boeing. Airbus delivered 577 commercial aircraft, 60 more than the year before. The manufacturer delivered 448 A320s, 97 A330s, 30 A380s and two A340s. Boeing delivered a total of 580 commercial aircraft, a significant 26% increase on the previous year. The company delivered 402 737s, 83 777s, 46 787s, 26 767s and 23 747s.

In the regional market, Bombardier and Embraer delivered 50 and 106 commercial aircraft, respectively. ATR also delivered 60 commercial turboprops, an all-time high for the manufacturer.

AIRLINER MARKET 10-YEAR VIEW - DELIVERIES

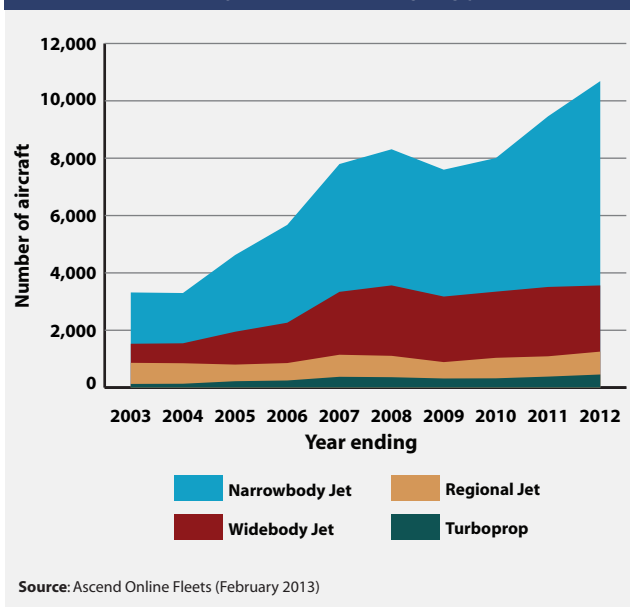

From an operator region perspective, 44% of the commercial aircraft delivered in 2012 were for operators based in Asia-Pacific followed by Europe with 23%.

Order backlog at 31 December 2012

Airliner backlog ended the year at 10,833, including 4,660 for Airbus and 4,380 for Boeing. The total backlog figure represents an increase of more than 1,000 aircraft on the previous year.

At the end of 2012, Malaysian carrier AirAsia topped the backlog by operator listing with 339 A320 family aircraft, 264 of which are for the Neo variant. AirAsia was also the fleet manager leader with 389 aircraft on order. Lion Air followed the listing by operator with 329 737s on order, including 150 Max. Southwest Airlines and United Airlines show an order backlog of 321 and 299 aircraft respectively which they both own and manage.

In the leasing market, GECAS, ILFC, Air Lease and Aviation Capital Group showed backlog figures of 286, 225, 244 and 185 respectively.

LEASING OUTLOOK

Top 10 lessors by fleet value

TOP FLIGHT

GECAS has kept its impressive lead in the leasing stakes. While its portfolio by fleet value dropped slightly in 2012 to $34.1 billion, there was a sharper decline at its nearest rival International Lease Finance (ILFC). Continued growth during the past 12 months has moved BBAM up to make it the third-largest lessor.

HIGH RISERS

Air Lease (ALC) marches on and less than three years after launch, a fleet portfolio of 151 valued at $5.6 billion puts it among the top 10 largest lessors in the world. Other rapid risers in 2012 lude Avolon, which grew its fleet value by 61% to $3.4 billion, and AWAS which grew by 19% to $6.1 billion.

REGIONAL SHIFT

Aircraft lessors hold a 20% share of the narrowbody aircraft backlog, and 12% of widebody orders. The latter is down on the 18% share lessors held five years ago. However, the biggest movement during that period is in regional jets. Lessors account for more than a fifth of the fleet backlog today, compared with only 3% in 2008.

EASTERN PROMISE

China Aircraft Leasing (CALC), which acquired 36 Airbus A320s last year, aims to build its portfolio to 100 aircraft by 2015, another sign of the growing development of the leasing sector in China.

BIG DEALS

A busy year for acquisitions in the sector was capped in December when Chinese investors agreed to buy a 90% stake in ILFC from AIG. It marks a further shift to the east in the finance sector after Japanese acquisitions earlier in the year. In October, Mitsubishi UFJ Lease & Finance acquired fast-growing Jackson Square Aviation after Sumitomo Mitsui completed its purchase of RBS Aviation Capital at the start of last year.

FINDING THE FUNDS

Record production means that airlines' delivery finance requirements will increase by 15% this year to $100 billion, with banking activity likely to grow significantly

The major airframers are set to deliver almost $100 billion worth of aircraft in 2013 as production rates in Airbus and Boeing's plants surpass the record output of 1,190 units set last year.

According to projections based on data from the Flightglobal's Ascend Online database, almost $96 billion worth of aircraft will be delivered by Airbus and Boeing this year (applying 2013 full-life base values). A further $3 billion worth of metal will be shipped by Bombardier and Embraer.

"We estimate that demand for finance is up by 15% this year over 2012," says Flightglobal Ascend senior aviation analyst Rob Morris.

Airbus will again be shaded by its US rival, shipping $42 billion of assets, compared with $53 billion from Seattle. Airbus will earn more from single-aisles, delivering $24.7 billion worth of A320 family aircraft against $22.6 billion worth of 737s. But Toulouse looks set to be beaten fair and square in the more lucrative widebody market, delivering $17.7 billion worth of A330s and A380s against an impressive tally of $30.8 billion in 747s, 767s 777s and 787s by Boeing.

Well over two-fifths of the 2013 financing requirements will be from Asia-Pacific airlines, which will take $45 billion worth of airliners. "That's 18% greater than last year," Morris points out.

Europe accounts for around a fifth ($20 billion) of the delivery financing needs, while North American carriers will need to find almost $15 billion in financing this year. Morris says that the North American figure is around 40% greater than 2012.

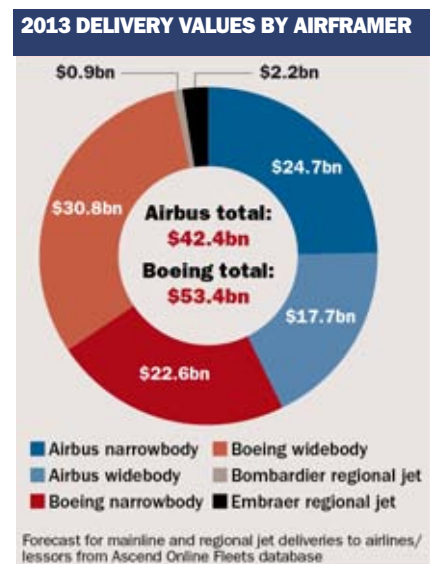

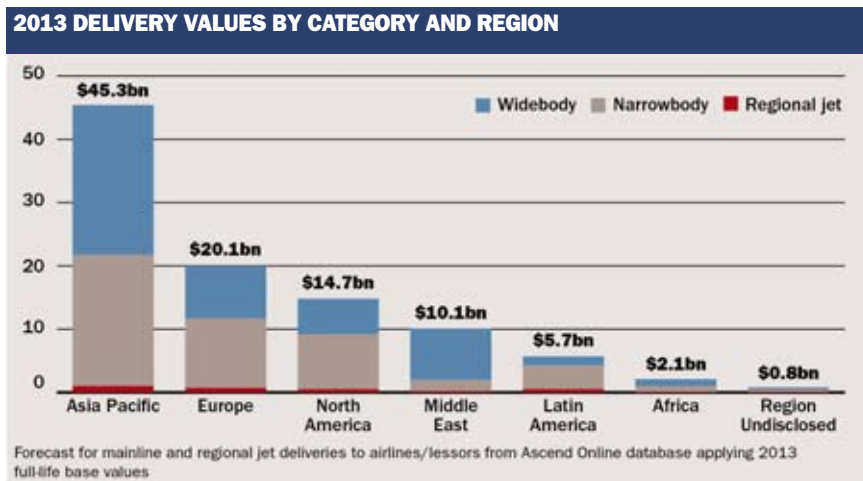

Deliveries to Middle Eastern carriers will account for around $10 billion this year.

Morris expects that export credit agency (ECA) activity will be broadly the same as 2012: "We estimate around $24.5 billion worth of ECA financings, despite the potential increase in cost," he says.

Bank activity is expected to grow significantly, with Asia Pacific driving much of that growth due to its greater funding requirements.

Capital market activity is set to increase by as much as 50%. This will be driven by the increased value of deliveries to North American airlines, Morris says.

"As for the assets, around 80% of deliveries will be types Ascend classes as 'liquid', and thus relatively easy to finance. That's around the same ratio as last year and on this basis we expect finance will be found for the other 20%, as it was in 2012."

MARKET OUTLOOK

What appraisers expect in 2013

Five appraisers review the market in 2012 and take a look ahead in 2013

Will there be a lot of order reshuffling this year?

Collateral Verifications VP Commercial Aviation Services Gueric Dechavanne: “This will depend greatly on the state of the industry throughout the year. Should things keep moving at the same pace, we could see some deferrals from operators that were expecting 2013 to show more significant improvements that might be seen. This may be region specific though as some of the regions, such as North America, will most likely continue to take delivery of new aircraft, which are predominantly used as replacement aircraft versus growth aircraft.”

ICF SH&E VP Ken de Jaeger: “ICF SH&E does not anticipate a material amount of order reshuffling in 2013 above and beyond what is typical in most years.”

IBA Group’s head of valuations and modelling Stuart Hatcher: “As the market continues to evolve then understandably airlines and operating lessors will want the freedom to shuffle some of their orders around, where possible. The backlog of Airbus A319s and Boeing 737-700s is quite smaller now, but there is plenty of room to move A320/737-800s up to the A321/737-900ER models. Likewise, we might expect to see the same for the A350 as well as the programme gathers momentum.”

Ascend director of valuations Les Weal: “Probably some. We expect some airlines will push deliveries to the right and airlines with major fleet replacement needs (US airlines?) step in.”

Do you expect a pullback in orders for the 787 due to recent concerns? Will values be impacted?

Dechavanne: “I don’t believe we will see much pullback unless the current issues create a very significant delay. Values should also not get greatly impacted unless the issues found become more permanent, which is not expected. Boeing has too much invested in this aircraft to not do what is necessary to get the aircraft back up and flying. I am confident that once the full issues have been identified, they will be fixed and the programme will continue as planned. I believe that in today’s environment, there is a lot of pressure from operators to have the original equipment manufacturers (OEM) produce more technologically advanced aircraft and due to this, there will always be issues that need to be worked out in the initial deliveries of these aircraft. This is what we are currently experiencing with the 787.”

De Jaeger: “ICF SH&E would not anticipate any significant new orders being signed until the root cause of the 787 battery issues have been identified. The investigation is still early and any commentary on the valuation impact would be pure speculation at this point.”

Hatcher: “Providing Boeing can sort this problem out, get the current fleet flying and prevent any long-term delays then a value crisis should be averted. But can it be done quickly and effectively to prevent further delays? The early line numbers already have big question marks above them as analysts try to assess their true capability versus those built further down the line – this could just be another reason why the majority of these early builds will not attract the lessors in the same way as the later builds. Once you couple the issues of weight, engine mod level and now battery issues, these early-build aircraft will have a different value treatment anyway – but that is no different to any other new programme in history either! Once the issues are sorted (still early days on when that will be) and the latest engines are in full production then it will be time for Boeing to prove just how good the design is. If this is part of a more serious issue, then we would expect to see some value impact. Given the bad press, I would expect to see more A350 orders this year – particularly for those who have been sitting on the fence. Some 787 orders will fall away but we may possibly see more reshuffling towards the larger variant(s?).”

Tailwind Capital Bryson Monteleone: “Pullbacks only if there is a significant re-design to the aircraft similar to the A380 programme, and operators cannot wait for additional lift should the program be paused.”

Weal: “Too early to say and probably not.”

Do you anticipate more aircraft to be parked in 2013? Why?

Dechavanne: “Yes. Unless traffic picks up significantly this year, operators will continue to replace older less efficient aircraft with newer aircraft, which means that more aircraft will be parked, perhaps indefinitely.”

De Jaeger: “ICF SH&E does not anticipate an increase in the fleet of parked aircraft in 2013; as always, bankruptcies and unpredictable exogenous events can and do cause spikes.”

Hatcher: “It is still tough out there and despite the expectation that fuel prices will stabilise, certain aircraft types will be parked up. Certainly the A340s and 747s will continue to feel the pain, likewise the smaller members of large families will continue to move to the desert. As passenger demand continues to rise, we may actually see more aircraft returning to service. Many airlines have become savvier to managing their available seat kilometres and operating lessors will be pushing hard to return many of their parked aircraft back into service. The overall number parked will remain the same, but the inmates will change. Undoubtedly some young aircraft will make their way into the desert as funding remains tight but new investors will continue to emerge and return a little confidence back to the market.”

Monteleone: “As long as OEMs continue to pump out new aircraft “en masse” at aggressive production rates, and financing/leasing for new aircraft remains more compelling, many used aircraft will have no place to go but be parked.”

Weal: “More important question are the permanent retirements and Ascend is interested to see if the youthfulness of the retirements we have seen last year continues in 2013.”

Do you believe the new ASU will see airlines rethink the amount of new aircraft they order?

Dechavanne: “This will not have much of an impact. Although the cost of financing new aircraft has and will go up, it is still less expensive than trying to finance used aircraft.”

De Jaeger: “Export credit financing has certainly provided a significant amount for new deliveries, and one consequence has been a migration of demand toward new aircraft, at the expense of used equipment. As the new ASU comes into effect, the relative attractiveness of used equipment will likely increase again, but we will still continue to see significant new orders as the industry grows.”

Hatcher: “Nothing seems to affect how airlines think about new orders. Judging by recent activity, the game is centred on flooding the market with capacity, which is inevitable given that OEMs will raise production in order to reduce its backlog quicker or simply at the same rate that it is filling up! Having said that, airlines cannot continue in this way indefinitely and we may see some reduction in orders from some of the main culprits of recent years – but there are still countless operators out there who have yet to place their order. Providing the airline has a reasonable business case then funding will appear from new avenues in the Middle East and Asia.”

Monteleone: “Not as long there remains an abundance of easy financing, especially by lessors willing to less than stellar credits.”

Which aircraft saw the greatest recovery in 2012?

Dechavanne: “I wouldn’t say that any aircraft saw a recovery. There were several new aircraft that remained stable, such as the 777-300ER and the A330-300 but the market still remained soft for most aircraft. On the used out-of-production side, the 757 remained the most stable aircraft compared to others.”

De Jaeger: “We really did not see much recovery in any of the aircraft types, but if we have to choose one aircraft, it would be the 737-900ER.”

Hatcher: “This is probably too strong a statement for any aircraft in 2012 as the market continues to remain flat and depressed. Specific types continue to move around in relatively large numbers that does provide some encouragement, although a single operator or specific regions are usually behind it – i.e. MD-90s, 757s and Fokker 70/100s – although the latter two have been holding their own for a number of years now.”

Monteleone: “Large turboprops.”

Weal: “Not sure anything really recovered in the jet sector.”

Which aircraft performed the worst in 2012?

Dechavanne: “Whilst most markets remained soft in 2012, the values of the 767-300ERs, older 737-800s, and A340s were hit the most.”

De Jaeger: "The ERJ-135/140/145 family."

Hatcher: "Any A340!"

Monteleone: "737 Next Generation aircraft and intermediate widebodies."

Weal: "Not a sensible question, different jobs have vastly different result, I would suspect late build 747-400Fs were pretty weak and the A340-300 is in a tailspin."

Do you see the second-hand market for narrowbodies improving this year?

Dechavanne: "Unfortunately no. There might be some stability if traffic numbers are better than expected but due to the fact that the OEMs have continued to ramp up production and financing of used aircraft remains difficult, this will continue to negatively impact second-hand aircraft."

De Jaeger: "ICF SH&E expects the market for used but young (5-15 years old) narrowbody aircraft to improve this year, as more airlines and investors see the relative value in the aircraft at current trading levels."

Hatcher: "Difficult to imagine. Too many new aircraft are due for delivery to spark any sudden surge and they will take all the financing up too! We expect to see more 'lessor-lessor' sales as new investors emerge to play the game. We will expect to see a slight return of lease rates first (despite low interest rates) before any pricing will return."

Monteleone: "Narrowbodies will remain in-flux as there remains both a technological sunset for the Next Generation aircraft and perhaps a built-in obsolescence for the Neo and Max variants. Airlines seem to be happy with operating lessors taking on the residual risk as lessors continue to fill up their order books with large orders."

Weal: "We need to see improved volumes of trades before we can call this."

Do you see the second-hand market for widebodies improving this year?

Dechavanne: "No. My answer is similar to the one for narrowbody aircraft. There might be some level of stability with some aircraft should the cargo market improve thereby reasing the demand for converted freighters. Otherwise, 2013 will not be too dissimilar from 2012."

De Jaeger: "ICF SH&E's baseline expectation is that the second-hand widebody market would not improve in 2013 given the planned production levels; however, if the 787 battery issues are not resolved quickly, we would anticipate some increased demand from airlines to extend existing leases of medium widebody aircraft, providing support for elevated lease rates. Such support would not necessarily translate to improvements in values."

Hatcher: "Some types will move about but they will be older variants as the new types don't trade outside of the sale and leaseback market or post-repossession. If fuel prices does remain intact for 2013, then we could see a rise in freight traffic but I still believe there are too many big freighters parked up to spur any sudden conversion frenzy this year – although it would be good to see the low-cost freighter programme come to fruition. Fuel stock are looking good but they may not be let go at market pricing if their book values remain too high. A340s will continue to trade this year but appraisers will struggle to keep up with the dropping values. Part-outs will probably drop away as well as that market reaches saturation. The year 2013 will also see an reasing number of A330s on the market. Off-lease, the pricing may appear scary, but providing they can find new homes or conversion prospects, the amount of desert time will hopefully remain short."

Monteleone: "Yes, only if the 787 continues to have problems and operators require immediate lift. Otherwise intermediate widebodies might soften."

Weal: "The 787 grounding could give the lease rates a fillip. Book value depreciation would be a good outcome for any aircraft." ■
